SUMMARY

Robert Bales is an engineer with thirty years of hands-on residential, commercial and civil construction experience combined with a 20-year solo legal practice (now retired) restricted to real estate and property development in Ottawa, and twenty years as an arbitrator and now as a construction adjudicator. As a Project Manager acting for the owners, he has developed and built about 700 residential units, together with commercial and residential refits and renovations. His experience as an arbitrator and adjudicator extend from very modest claims under the Taron Builder Arbitration Forum to high value, complex civil claims under the Ontario MTO Referee (Adjudication) Process for road and bridge construction. With diverse backgrounds in both construction and legal matters, his present activities are focused on the implementation and development of construction adjudication across Canada, while serving as an adjudicator over the full spectrum of claims.

Robert Bales is a seasoned construction professional with a wide variety of experience as an engineer, project manager and builder, and has many years' experience as a lawyer in construction and real estate matters.
